$94,000 To Outfit Local Crop Of Babies

NEW YORK, Mar. 12—Babies have become big business in Appomattox County. Each new one, as it arrives, sets into motion a flurry of spending on the part of its parents, grandparents and other relatives.

The current baby crop, which has weighed in on schedule, proves to be a lusty and hefty batch, with a loud demand for the latest in comforts and services, many of which were non-existent when grandpa was born.

On the market and available to them are scientifically - prepared foods, special clothing and toiletries, functional furniture for the nursery, bathinettes equipped with all kinds of gadgets, diaper service, formula service and so, on.

Besides the basics, a whole host of baby industries, some of which are not very old themselves, are busy catering to their majesties.

This volume of business done in Appomattox County by these centers hinges directly upon the local birth rate, which is at a healthy 20.3 per 1,000 population, comparing favorably with the rate in the county in 1960, 17.5 per 1,000.

The findings are based on latest official government figures, covering the year ending January 1, 1960, gathered by the U. S. Public Health Service and recently released.

They show that there were some 186 babies born to local parents in the year. Not included in the total were those born locally to non-residents.

Various estimates have been advanced by baby-supply firms as to the initial cost of providing for a new-born child.

A middle-of-the-road figure puts it at $505. It breaks down to $120 for clothing, $50 for a layette, $185 for furniture, $40 for toys, $35 for diapers and pants, $30 for bedding, and $45 for tolletries. If the baby is a second or a third child, it is somewhat less.

Assuming that the $505 average applies in Appomattox County, the amount of new busines that is stirred up by the year's crop of babies adds up to $94,000.

Birth rates are expected to zoom upward in a few years when the post-wartiables, today's teen-agers, start getting married.
